The Order of the Coif / ' k ɔɪ f / is an honor society for United States law school graduates. The name is a reference to the ancient English order of advocates, the serjeants-at-law, whose courtroom attire included a coif-- a white lawn or silk skullcap, which came to be represented by a round piece of white lace worn on top of the advocate's wig. A student at an American law school who ...

Washington and Beijing see each other as major competitors in cyberspace and as a result both are trying to improve cyber defense and resilience, decouple technology supply chains, and shape the rules of the road for state behavior in cyberspace. The contours of this competition are clearer than the outcomes. Both sides may end up less secure and innovative.
